OKLAHOMA STATUTES NO GOOD

Editors of Laws Condensed Them.—State Loses $30,000.

Guthrie, Okla., Feb. 6.—That the statutes of 1908 are nothing but a digest of the laws of the state of Oklahoma and that they do not contain or purport to contain a true and correct copy of the laws of the state, is the finding of the senate legal advisory committee as a result of an investigation into the numerous errors and omissions in the volume.

The only explanation of the existing condition which the committee is able to give is that the editors of the volume, who were appointed by the supreme court, thought that they had a right to condense the contents of the laws, to save space and give what they considered a correct interpretation of the laws, basing this view upon the wording of the statute passed by the last legislature which authorized the publication of the volume. The committee report does not express any concurrence with this view of the law as expressed by the editors but merely gives their version of the matter.

As a result of its findings the committee recommends that all references to existing laws in bills amending or repealing statutes be made to the statutes of 1893 or the subsequent session laws.

"We should cease to refer to the opinions expressed in this book as to what the law is," said Senator Thomas, chairman of the committee, in presenting its report, "but go back to the law itself."

This report of the legal advisory committee refers only to the utility of the new statutes for reference, which is pronounced to be nil. A joint committee of the two houses is at present engaged in a general investigation of the statutes, and has not yet made its report. It seems to be generally admitted that the state is "stuck" for $30,000 on presented by a company of recognizing its contract with the Pipes-Reed ed talents, all of whom understand company, of Kansas, which published the value of advanced ideas in the volume, as it was to have melody as well as infectious merriment.

FINDS HIS LOST SON.

They Had Been Separated Eighteen Years.—Lived in Same Block.

Muskogee, Okla., Feb. 6.—Eighteen years ago Milo B. Terry of Des Moines, Iowa, kissed his two little boys, Milo and Clement, five and three years old, goodbye and sent them to relatives in Missouri to save them from a plague of typhoid fever which had devastated his home, claiming six of his 12 children. The father himself was stricken with fever and when he recovered after weeks of illness was only to find that all traces was lost of the little boys who had been sent away.

Today in Muskogee Mr. Terry, an elderly man, saw the name of Milo B. Terry signed to a petition and going to the residence of the Terrys found that the young man is his son for whom he has been searching for 18 years. For the past seven months father and son have lived within a block of each other in the Midland Valley addition here.

The elder Terry is in the grocery business in Muskogee. The younger is an employee of the Midland Valley road. After father and son had rejoiced over the strange meeting, arrangements were made for the elder Terry to take up his residence with his son's family.

A Bunch of Keys.

"A Bunch of Keys" which originally became known as the most wholly satisfying skit ever perpetrated, and earned further advantage on account of lending its fun to the strains of enticing music, is announced to pay a visit here next Tuesday night, February 9th, at the Ada Opera House. And already there is a longing desire to testify a substantial reward for the intense pleasure this entertainment will bring, more especially due to the reliable promises made concerning the many innovations of novel feature to be seen in the modification of the decree. The statement in part follows:

"The proposed modification is not an offer to do business in partnership with the State, but that the judgement of ouster be modified and the matter held in abeyance, and in the meantime permit the company to do business under the eye of the court of the State. If the court desired, it could, under the modification proceed to render a judgement of final ouster.

"Under the modification as proposed, the State could control the price of the products and prevent the company from recouping its losses in fines from the people. In the last analysis it presents a question of whether or not the welfare of the State, its business and its citizens would be benefited to any extent by warranting a Court of Chancery to undertake the supervision. The interests of the Standard Oil Company itself is not a matter of consideration. It is a procedure unique and new, because the conditions presented are unique and new. Should the modification be favorably considered, then I would in that event ask that the fine be greatly increased.

"It is a question purely in the discretion of the Court."

SUBMISSION LOST IN TEXAS.

Only One More Vote Needed to Have Won.

Austin, Feb. 6.—One vote defeated submission in the house. Immediately upon convening the members plunged into the submission issue. The call of the house to order to secure a full attendance of all members in Austin and it was found that but three members were absent. Goodman, who is an anti-submissionist, Pierce, a republican, and Walker, who is regarded as against the resolution.

Vote announced was 85 to 45 in favor of submission. Loss was declared as less than two thirds, necessary to carry.

The actual vote was 86 to 44 but Mobley, a strong submissionist changed his vote at the last moment so he can call the question for reconsideration.

The vote of 86 constituted almost the needed majority and the submissionists would have needed but 87 or just one more vote.

KILLS SEDUCER OF DAUGHTER MAN SUDDENLY DISAPPEARS

Remains of Someone Found in Filled Old Well.—A Suspect Arrested.

Altus, Okla., Feb. 6.—What became of one Brantly, a hired man of the Funderbunk farm, working for one Lee, a renter, six years ago? That is the question that has remained unanswered for six long years. That is the mystery that refuses to unsolve itself, but murder will out, and from all present indications the people of this county are about to learn something of the most brutal and horrible murder ever committed upon the soil of Jackson county. Six years ago a man named Brantly came to Oklahoma from Texas and hired to a man named Lee. The latter was renting land at the time on the Funderbunk farm, five miles south of Altus. The stranger appeared to have been prosperous, and saved his money, for it is known that at the time he came here he had over nine hundred dollars in cash. He kept this money about his person, and unfortunately disclosed the fact to others.

He went to work, proved an industrious and energetic helper on the farm, and being a bachelor, with no apparent inclination for the society of the female sex, naturally spent his time with the boys, thus forming a number of acquaintances and some friends. Among those were a few who employed him also knew he had the money.

Suddenly the boys began to miss Brantly from among them. His absence became prolonged and attracted attention. Inquiry at the farm brought the information that he had gone to Texas. He did not go to Texas. He disappeared, when and why, were questions unanswered. Dark suspicions were aroused; whispered consultations were held and murmuring rumors began to fly here and there. But there being no apparent clue, or evidence of foul play or crime, the matter soon blew over and was finally lost sight of. On the farm was an old disused well, which had been open for a long time and was covered with a wagon bed. Soon after the mysterious disappearance of Brantly this old well was found to have been filled up. Then Lee suddenly pulled up and left for other parts. This sudden movement on his part was food for more gossip and suspicion, however, nothing definite was done in an attempt to solve the mystery which seemed to hold the shadows of a crime. Many people expressed the sentiment that

"The proposed modification is not an offer to do business in partnership with the State, but that the judgement of ouster be modified and the matter held in abeyance, and in the meantime permit the company to do business under the eye of the court of the State. If the court desired, it could, under the modification proceed to render a judgement of final ouster.

NORMAL FOR ADA.

There was a goodly crowd out at the Club rooms Saturday evening when the state normal was discussed.

When W. H. Ebey, chief clerk of the House of the Legislature, had concluded his remarks relative to his estimation of the situation at Guthrie, as affected Ada, there was a general applause, and expressions of approval and mutual congratulation. Other citizens of Ada who had been at the State Capitol among whom were: W. L. Reed and Chas. Thomas spoke briefly.

The following made additional subscriptions to the normal fund, making some instances the third subscription.

The Ada News got out a very creditable edition Monday evening, setting forth the virtues and growth of Ada, and her fitness for a state normal school. It was freely distributed among the members of the legislature. Ada is certainly rustling for a state institution and it appears

will be successful.—Stratford Tribune

The Daily News appreciates the above compliment to itself and the encouraging words relative to Ada's excellent chance to secure the normal.

The Daily News is the medium through which to reach the people of Ada and surrounding country. It goes to them daily and you get quick results on your advertising.

AN EXPLANATION.

Some times one's enthusiasm in promotion or support of an enterprise prompts one to an action which may lack discretion.

It may be that some of the New's friends view the manner of the News discussion of the state normal campaign unfavorably. The public may know that the state normal committee has directed the general policy of this paper in its utterances relative to the state normal undertaking. But in specific endorsement of one or two fulminations vented by the News, it is probable that some of the normal committee do not concur, though they have forbore saying a word or winking an eye.

The News editor took occasion the other day to criticize the larger institutions in this city, having in mind the banks and cement manufacture for not having subscribed any amount to the normal fund in behalf of their own, respective corporate concerns and furthermore dared to state that in probability the indifferent amounts subscribed by many citizens was prompted through the thought that the heaviest institutions in the city were not responding to the committee's application for funds.

The News was unintentionally, but clearly, in the wrong in uttering such criticism and makes explanation. It is clearly against the rules of both the State and National banking departments that banks shall be allowed to subscribe money to any enterprise wherein there is any speculation as to its success. Such discretion in the use of corporate funds is invariably the settled policy of all corporation officers and directors; therefore, the reason of the Ada banks and manufacture not appearing on the published subscription lists. And further, since it has been freely stated on the streets of Ada that the reason of so many small subscriptions from the rank and file of the business citizens was the thought that the presidents of the three leading Ada banks had only subscribed $5.00 each to the normal fund, it is justice to state, that also, in this thought there exists a misapprehension for it is now remembered by the News editor that when the State normal committee, three of whom were the bank presidents above referred to, agreed that since a representative must be sent to Guthrie at once, each of the committee, without taking a subscription at an inopportune time, would pay $5.00 each to meet the emergency. They did so with the one exception of the News editor and turned the amount over to Mr. Ebey. The writer, in lieu of a $5.00 advance, and with the committee's permission paid his own expenses to Guthrie. Those members of the committee, including Messrs. Hays, Hope and Reed, bankers, did not mean at all to have that first five dollar subscription, paid on emergency, represent their regular subscriptions and, in such showing each of them since has made additional liberal subscriptions.

Grant's Old Home Rehabilitated.

St. Louis, Mo., Feb. 7.—The old home of Gen. U. S. Grant, on the Gravois road, St. Louis County, has been purchased by Augustus A. Busch, the millionaire brewer, and turned into a model game preserve.

The General's famous log cabin, which has been lifted bodily and taken to several expositions, has also been acquired and returned to its original foundation, and all of the souvenirs of the General's life that were obtainable have been placed in it. The cabin will be used as a museum.

Supreme Legal Authority.

Guthrie, Ok., Feb. 5.—A measure to make the Attorney General the supreme legal authority of the state was offered by Mr. Dunn of Oklahoma City in the house tonight, which provides that the Attorney General and his assistants and the county attorneys had their assistants. In the decision of the supreme court in the Haskell-West case affecting hearing of the Prairie Oil and Gas case in the Logan county district court it was held that the laws did not define duties of the Attorney General and that he had no authority to initiate suits in the name of the state in the district court without consent of the governor, whom the constitution, the decision held, was the supreme authority in the state.

It seems probable that the incoming administration will inherit the Dr. Crum case. This colored man's name has been sent to the Senate repeatedly, by President Roosevelt, as collector of the port of Charleston, to be turned down each time. Denison Herald.

A great many of our firms are sending to Washington for their envelopes. Uncle Sam furnishes envelopes for nothing and stamps and prints same for just about the cost of stamps. Of course we cannot expect to enter into competition with the U. S. but believe that if the business men will give the matter a minute's thought they will patronize home institutions instead.—Madill News.

people and with an eye single to their interests.

In these words President Roosevelt today summoned up a message to the house of representatives, returning without his approval the bill providing for the taking of the next census, because of the provisions prescribing that appointments shall be made on the basis of non-competitive examinations instead of through the civil service commission. As passed by congress the bill permitted members to designate persons for positions after they had undergone a simple examination.

Incidentally the president referred to the provision authorizing the printing of census reports by private concerns and laid stress on the point that where work was so allotted the eight hour law should be "applied in effective fashion."

State Banking Board Report.

Guthrie, Ok., Feb. 5.—Gov. Haskell has submitted the first annual report of the state banking board to the legislature, showing that the guaranty fund amounts to $253,349.17, being 1 per cent on the average daily deposits for the year just closed. The assessment was gathered in four payments.

One failure is reported by the board, that of the International bank at Coalgate, on May 21, last year. It required $24,843.73 of the guaranty fund to handle the failure, all of which has been replaced in the fund. The report makes no recommendations; however, the Roddie bill, which passed the senate yesterday, has the approval of the state banking department.

SPEAK A WORD.

When life's way is dark and dreary,
When some brother's heart is weary,
Then, O comrade! if you're cherry,
Speak a word.

Oft a word the path will brighten,
Heavy cares and sorrows lighten,
Gathering clouds of trouble frighten:
Speak a word.

Knowest thou thy brother's sorrow?
May alight on thee tomorrow?
If a kindness thou wouldst borrow,
Speak a word.

Just a word, but O, how thrilling!
Small, but some sad heart 'tis filling.
You can always, if you're willing,
Speak a word.

AN EARTHQUAKE ALIBI FOR GOD.
Could God prove that He was not in Italy's recent earthquake? Or could somebody prove an alibi for Him? This question has been much discussed. Some will have it that God was not there at all. If He was not there, where was He? He is everywhere, and he was in the earthquake of course. And He was not there simply as a witness. He was there efficiently, or at least permissively. All the earthquakes that have ever been, or ever will be, have from all eternity, been taken into God's great plan, and they are there with good reason, though we in our ignorance may not be able to discover these reasons. It is impossible to imagine any occurrence of any kind that was not in God's plan in some way, for some good purpose—the quake of an earthquake or the tremor of a leaf, the flight of a bird or of an airship. Laws of nature are but God's methods of working. Then what was God's purpose in allowing the earthquake and its slaughter of human beings? That is another question. If it were not for these awful catastrophes occasionally, it might be that we should get the big head and conclude that we are running the world, and doing it without any help from God. It might be that, without these awful manifestations of God's power, men would cease to believe that there is any God, and that as a consequence more would kill themselves in riotous living than are killed in the earthquake. Or it might be that the power of such calamities to draw the nations together in mutual sympathy and helpfulness will prevent wars and thus save many more lives than are lost in the earthquake. Or it might be that these sudden and awful seismic disturbances more effectively lift nations out of their selfishness and their indifference to higher things and thus minister to their training and development in such a way as to make this God's most economical way of accomplishing the discipline of humanity. Certainly these mighty convulsions of nature ought to startle all of us into the recognition of the uncertainty of life and the certainty of death, and ought to lead us to prepare for the inevitable end of this life, and the continuance of that which will never come to an end.—Central Baptist.

A NEGROES' SKULL BROKEN

George Duke Knocks Down Tom Holloway and Fractures His Head

Yesterday in the "Negro Flats" district, George Duke knocked down Tom Holloway with a club, cracking his skull.

Prosecuting Attorney Wimbish had George Duke jailed, and this evening his assistant, J. W. Dean will take the statement of Tom Holloway, as his wound may prove more serious than is now apparent, though it is bad.

A Sad Visit.

Rev. J. D. White, pastor of the Presbyterian church in Ada, returned Saturday night from Mississippi, where he went to visit his father who was ill and subsequently died.

He was accompanied by his wife and they visited her family, the father of which had recently died. So the visit of Mr. and Mrs. White was indeed a sad one.

The News joins their many friends in sympathy for them in their bereavement.

A WOMAN SHOOTS MEXICAN

He Had Slashed Her Tent with a Knife Trying to Effect an Entrance.

Saturday night at the rock crusher a mile and a half from Ada, a negro woman who was occupying a tent there, shot a Mexican who was attempting to gain an entrance by cutting the tent with his knife.

The ball entered the side of the Mexican and striking a rib went around without inflicting a very serious wound. He is doing very well. The negro woman has made her escape.

The bullet penetrated the boy's lung and shattered the spine, killing the child instantly.

VALUE OF FRIENDSHIP.

Friendship is one of the mightiest powers in the universe. It is at the same time one of the least appreciated powers.

We delight in friendship. We find comfort in it for times of sorrow, and increased joy in times of prosperity. Our friends exhilarate us and instruct us. They are like the good books, furnishing lamps to our feet. They supply lights to our dwellings.

We do not value or use this friendship half so much as we should, even for ourselves. We moon away by ourselves and try to extract spiritual nutriment from the sucked-out orange of our minds, while close at hand is this rare, full-fruited orchard of our friends. An hour's talk with a group of friends—an hour's talk such as might easily be—is worth in mental quickening ten days in any library. But when we meet our friends we grant and nod and silently pass them portions of our newspapers.

Friends may halve our sorrows, but we seldom speak of them. Friends may be buttresses against our temptations, but we do not disclose them. Friends may open to us new vistas in life and present to us new incentives to duty, but we stroll off on our solitary paths that finally return upon themselves. We choose our tasks and then bow down and worship them in loneliness, building up around them little temples of selfish application. What man is there—yourself or any of your acquaintances—that gets for himself out of friendship more than a very small part of what there is in it?

But all this is of little moment compared with the failure to utilize friendship for the good of the world. "I am fairly frantic," said Edison, looking out over the tumbling waves of the Atlantic, "when I see so much power going to waste." So must any philanthropist, any one that has at heart the good of mankind, feel moved with a vast longing to harness in beneficent service the countless currents and billows and moving tides of human affection.

Here are a dozen men that like one another immensely. I know more than one such coterie. Their tastes are closely akin. Their life tasks are similar. Their ideals are fashioned in the same great mould of Christianity. Their purposes are measurably consonant. They often come together for enjoyment and profit. Such a group of men furnishes all the elements of an almost irresistible social force. In the case of Napoleon and his generals, in the case of Socrates and his pupils, in the case of Carey and the Serampore Brotherhood, most of all in the case of Christ and the twelve apostles, we get glimpses of the mighty potency of such illustrations! They are the Pleiades and Hyades of history. They might be, they should be, the familiar forces of your city and your neighborhood.

Whenever any company of men or women or young folks are drawn to one another, let them ask themselves the meaning of that affinity. It is not given them for their own delight and use alone. They are to fashion their fellowship into a missionary force.

They are to consider what ideal, what noble impulse, is common to them all, or may be made common to them all. How runs the grain of the wood, that it may be split and smoothed into a tool? They are to watch for the movements of the spirit of God upon their souls, bending them toward some one direction. They are to yield themselves gladly to the leading of this or that of their number, as the Spirit seems to speak through him. They are to know that God has tasks that can be accomplished only by solitary workers. And they are willingly to obey His glorious will.

That is the secret of the whole matter—the eagerness to be used. When this eagerness exists in the hearts of men, unhampered by selfishness and egotism and pride friendship becomes not merely a sparkling sea in which to bathe as the sunlight touches the crest of the waves and the sky laughs with the shouts of the rompers, but it becomes also a field for fleets, moving in stern ranks against all enemies of God, or setting forth upon discoveries of good.

Citizens of Ada who have friends or relatives visiting them, or when they go elsewhere on a visit, will confer a favor on the News by calling up No. 4 and phoning the information.

WHEREIN LIES REAL SNOBBERY.

American Writer Takes Distinct Issue with English Author.

"I know," said Mr. Anthony Hope Hawkins, recently, "it needs a good deal of courage to stand up in a cultivated audience and confess you have never read through—right through—'Paradise Lost.'" But all good people ought to be brave enough to stand up and make such confession. Concealment in such a case as the author of the "Prisoner of Zenda" considers "exasperating literary snobbishness." This is a mistake which others than Anthony Hope have made and will go on making; that people, nowadays, are ashamed of confessing that they have never read "Paradise Lost," "The Vicar of Wakefield" and "Culture and Anarchy." As a matter of fact, up-to-date literary snobbishness consists in boasting one's ignorance of Milton, Goldsmith and Matthew Arnold. In "literary" circles it is other gods that reign. It is Henley of whom one must have pagefuls by heart, Swinburne that is quoted by romantic wood fires at studio teas, Wilde's "Picture of Dorian Grey" that holds high place in fiction. It is the proper thing now to attach one's self to new and rather small writers. They alone know the "modern" heart. To confess that one has read through "Paradise Lost" would be almost as bad as saying one liked Dickens and Thackeray.—New York Evening Post.

AT WORK WITH BROKEN SPINE.

Man Who Defies All Accepted Laws of Medicine.

A man who, according to all the accepted laws of medicine, should have been dead six months ago, has been presented to the students of the Gottingen University hospital. In May last he fractured his spine in a fall and was taken to the hospital, where, although his case was considered hopeless, an operation was decided upon.

Accordingly the bones of the vertebral column were reunited with aluminum wire and the affected part straightened with a tube of the same metal. As, however, the slightest shock would have been fatal to the patient, he was placed in a specially constructed bath and kept lying in water for four months, at the end of which the injury had sufficiently healed to allow of his being removed to an ordinary bed.

A metal bandage was placed about his body, rendering movement impossible, but after another two months the patient, with the aid of a metal waistcoat, was able to walk. He is now able to do light work, and so long as he wears his "armor" and escapes another fall or similar hurt is expected to live.

Malvern Hill.

The burning of the mansion which has for a century or two crowned the historic Malvern hill removes one of the famous objects of interest to passengers on the James river steamboats, since standing on an eminence of 60 feet out of the stream which thereabouts flows in long bows it could be seen for great distances and frequently reappeared in view after it had seemingly passed. The convolutions of the river made this peculiar elevation the culminating point for the last of the seven days' battles of the peninsula between the Army of the Potomac under McClellan and the Army of Northern Virginia under Lee. Malvern hill thus capped proved to the passerby one of the sights of our extremely delightful river trip. Like the other mansions of its period it faced the stream, that being its occupants' avenue of communication with the world.

Antelope in Colorado Fields.

About 200 antelope are feeding in alfalfa fields six miles southwest of here. These animals have been forced by the heavy snows to seek feed. Recently two bands, one numbering 125 and the other about 75, came in from the hills southwest of here. They have lived in this section since the law has been protecting them and at times have gone into settlements south of here. During the summer, and in fact at nearly all times of the year, they are quite tame. Some cattlemen have complained that they roamed over winter pastures and spoiled the range. At a ranch 30 miles south of here a large band is being fed with the ranchman's sheep.—Fort Morgan Correspondence, Denver Republican.

Envied the Waiter.

"It must be nice to be a waiter or have some other occupation like that that doesn't tie a fellow down to one place or one climate the year round," remarked a New York business man wistfully the other day, as he turned up his overcoat collar and shivered. "The waiter who took my order at dinner last evening told me that he was going down to Palm Beach early in January, to work until warm weather again—said he didn't like the climate up here. He does that every year he says. I don't like our winter climate here either, but I haven't got the cinch he has. I have to stay here."

SOMETHING NEW TO PERSIANS.

Power of Electricity Astonished Subjects of the Shah.

While sojourning recently at Shiraz, Persia, on business connected with an overland telegraph, an Englishman was visited by a Persian noble who had received a paralytic stroke in his left shoulder and arm. He said he had been told that there were magicians in the west who cured all diseases "by the aid of this fire" (electricity). The Englishman, having moderated the Persian's expectations by remarking that the statement was an exaggeration, had a powerful battery prepared. To the two poles of the battery copper wire was attached, and at the extremity of each wire a damp sponge. The Persian was invited to grasp one in the hand of his paralyzed arm.

Timidly complying, he was astonished to feel no sensation. "Wait a moment," said the Englishman, and slapped the other sponge on the man's shoulder. With a leap and a yell he bounded out of the room, amid the uproarious laughter of the officials. The shock effected a partial cure, but the frightened man refused to submit to a second application, declaring that he would far sooner suffer the paralysis.

Another Persian, whose curiosity conquered his fear, while examining the battery touched one of the terminals of the machine. As he felt no sensation, he laid his hand on the other terminal. A sudden yell and a backward jump were the result. The man was afterward heard telling his companions that he had been bitten by the evil one.

RETAIN THE ANCIENT CUSTOM.

City of London Still Makes the Annual Gift of Cloth.

The corporation of the city has recently forwarded to certain officers of state and other functions gifts of cloth which are annually presented in accordance with a custom many centuries old, says the London Times.

Four yards and a half of the best black cloth have been sent to each of the following: The lord chancellor, the lord chief justice, the master of the rolls, the lord chamberlain, the vice-chamberlain, the lord steward, the treasurer and comptroller of his majesty's household, the home secretary, the secretary of state for foreign affairs, the attorney general, the solicitor general, the recorder, the chamberlain and the common sergeant. The town clerk receives six yards of black cloth and six yards of green cloth, and his principal clerk four yards of each.

The origin of this custom is thus explained: In the early periods of history the retainers of great lords, wearing their liveries, were so numerous as to be dangerous both to the king and the laws. Many statutes were passed between 1377 and 1504 for the purpose of putting down disorders among the retainers, but an exception was made in favor of guilds and fraternities and men of "the mysteries" of cities and boroughs. This, it is thought, gave rise to the creation of liverymen of the several companies, and is supposed to be the foundation of this annual gift of what is called "livery cloth."

The Arniston Goblet.

The Arniston branch of the Dundas family of England possesses a curious Venetian goblet, and, like the famous "luck" of Eden Hall, they believe that their prosperity depends upon its preservation. It was given by his mother to Sir James Dundas in the reign of Queen Mary, with an injunction to preserve it carefully or misfortunes would attend the family. It once had a miraculous escape from destruction, for a very eccentric peeress, who for some unknown reason owed the family a grudge, concealing her sinister intentions, asked to be allowed to see it, and when it was handed to her she deliberately threw it on the ground.

Every one present held his breath, expecting to see it shattered into fragments, but strange to say it did not break, and it is still preserved intact.

OKLAHOMA STATUTES NO GOOD

Editors of Laws Condensed Them.—State Loses $80,000.

Guthrie, Okla., Feb. 6.—That the statutes of 1908 are nothing but a digest of the laws of the state of Oklahoma and that they do not contain or purport to contain a true and correct copy of the laws of the state is the finding of the senate legal advisory committee as a result of an investigation into the numerous errors and omissions in the volume.

The only explanation of the existing condition which the committee is able to give is that the editors of the volume who were appointed by the supreme court thought that they had a right to condense the contents of the laws to save space and give what they considered a correct interpretation of the laws having this view upon the wording of the statute passed by the last legislature which authorized the publication of the volume. The committee report does not express any concurrence with this view of the law as expounded by the editors but merely gives their version of the matter.

As a result of its findings the committee recommends that all references to existing laws in bills amending or repealing statutes be made to the statutes of 1908 or the subsequent session laws.

We should cease to refer to the opinions expressed in this book as to what the law is said Senator Thomas chairman of the committee in presenting its report but go back to the law itself.

This report of the legal advisory committee refers only to the utility of the new statutes for reference which is pronounced to be nil. A joint committee of the two houses is at present engaged in a general investigation of the statutes and more especially due to the reliable has not yet made its report. It promises made concerning the many seems to be generally admitted that innovations of novel feature to be the state is stuck for $30,000 on presented by a company of recognizable talents all of whom understand the value of advanced ideas in the volume as well as infectious merit.

FINDS HIS LOST SON.

They Had Been Separated Eighteen Years.—Lived in Same Block.

Muskogee, Okla., Feb. 6.—Eighteen years ago Milo B. Ferry of Des Moines, Iowa, kissed his two little boys, Milo and Clementine, age and three years old, goodbye, and sent them to relatives in Missouri to save them from a plague of typhoid fever which had devastated his home claiming six of his 12 children. The father himself was stricken with fever and when he recovered after weeks of illness, it was only to find that all traces was lost of the little boys who had been sent away.

Today in Muskogee Mr. Ferry, an elderly man, saw the name of Milo B. Ferry signed to a petition and going to the residence of the Ferry found that the young man is his son for whom he has been searching for 18 years. For the past seven months father and son have lived within a block of each other in the Midland Valley addition here.

The elder Ferry is in the grocery business in Muskogee. The younger is an employee of the Midland Valley road.

After father and son had rejoined over the strange meeting arrangements were made for the elder Ferry to take up his residence with his son's family.

KILLS SEDUCER OF DAUGHTER

Man Suddenly Disappears

Benefit of Someone Found in Filled Old Well.—A Suspect Arrested.

El Reno, Okla., Feb. 6.—Walter Hubbard, a prominent young man of this city was shot and killed this afternoon by Charles Steenrod, a mail carrier and the father of a girl. Hubbard is said to have wronged the girl. Two shots fired by the father of the girl went wild. Hubbard ran Steenrod pursuing and firing. One bullet struck the young man in the neck and another lodged in his back. Hubbard fell. As he lay on the ground another shot was fired taking effect in his heart. Steenrod then surrendered himself to the police. The shooting began at a school house in the south part of the city where Hubbard was working as a contractor.

It is said that Steenrod had talked with Hubbard regarding the alleged assault yesterday afternoon and returned home from the Hubbard residence swearing vengeance.

He is said to have hooded over the affair all night. This afternoon he took his revolver and left the house. The shooting followed. A coroner's jury returned a verdict tonight holding that Hubbard met his death by being shot by Steenrod.

Standard Oil and Missouri to Have Working Agreement.

Jefferson City, Mo., Feb. 7.—Attorney General Major in a statement tonight relative to the motion for a modification of the judgment of ouster filed by the Standard Oil Company said he does not deem it necessary to file any additional replies with the Supreme Court to the suggestions of the Standard Oil attorneys. The motion of the oil attorneys he said simply asks for clemency in the modification of the decree. The statement in part follows:

The proposed modification is not an offer to do business in partnership with the State but that the judgment of ouster be modified and the matter held in abeyance and in the meantime permit the company to do business under the eye of the court of the State. If the court desired it could under the modification proceed to render a judgment of final ouster.

Under the modification as proposed the State could control the price of the products and prevent the company from recouping its losses in fines from the people. In the last analysis it presents a question of whether or not the welfare of the State, its business and its citizens would be benefited to any extent by warranting a Court of Chancery to undertake the supervision. The interests of the Standard Oil Company itself is not a matter of consideration. It is a procedure unique and new because the conditions presented are unique and new. Should the modification be favorably considered then I would in that event ask that the fine be greatly increased.

It is a question purely in the discretion of the Court.

SUBMISSION LOST IN TEXAS.

Only One More Vote Needed to Have Won.

Austin, Feb. 6.—One vote defeated submission in the house immediately upon convening the members plunged into the submission issue. The call of the house to order to secure a full attendance of all members in Austin and it was found that but three members were absent. Goodman who is an anti-submissionist, Pierce a republican and Walter who is regarded as against the resolution.

Vote announced was 86 to 45 in favor of submission. Loss was declared as less than two thirds, necessary to carry.

The actual vote was 86 to 44 but Mobiley, a strong submissionist changed his vote at the last moment so he can call the question for reconsideration.

The vote of 86 constituted almost the needed majority and the submissionists would have needed but 87 or just one more vote.

Benefit of Someone Found in Filled Old Well.—A Suspect Arrested.

Altus, Okla., Feb. 6.—What became of one Brantly, a hired man of the Funderbunk farm working for one Lee, a renter six years ago? That is the question that has remained unanswered for six long years. That is the mystery that refuses to solve itself but murder will out and from all present indications the people of this county are about to learn something of the most brutal and horrible murder ever committed upon the soil of Jackson county. Six years ago a man named Brantly came to Oklahoma from Texas and hired to a man named Lee. The latter was renting land at the time on the Funderbunk farm five miles south of Altus. The stranger appeared to have been propitious and saved his money, for it is known that at the time he came here he had over nine hundred dollars in cash. He kept this money about his person and unfortunately disclosed the fact to others.

He went to work proved an industrious and energetic helper on the farm and being a bachelor with no apparent inclination for the society of the female sex naturally spent his time with the boys thus forming a number of acquaintances and some friends. Among those were a few who employed him also knew he had the money.

Suddenly the boys began to miss Brantly from among them. His absence became prolonged and attracted attention. Inquiry at the farm brought the information that he had gone to Texas. He did not go to Texas. He disappeared when and why were questions unanswered. Distracted suspicions were aroused. Whispered consultations were held and mumbly rumors began to fit here and there. But there being no apparent clue or evidence of foul play or crime the matter soon blew over and was finally lost sight of. On the farm was an old disused well which had been open for a long time and was covered with a wagon bed. Soon after the mysterious disappearance of Brantly this old well was found to have been filled up. Then Lee suddenly pulled up and left for other parts. This sudden movement on his part was food for more gossip and suspicion; however nothing definite was done in an attempt to solve the mystery which seemed to hold the shadows of a crime. Many people expressed the sentiment that they felt that there had been something wrong. The very air around the community seemed to be imbued with some dark forebodings or presiments. News was received from the place Lee had moved to that the man's actions were strange, and he had become peculiar in his ways, acting and disappearing as if he dreaded to meet the public. Time went on the years passed by, people became occupied with other things and the matter was lost track of.

But murder will out some time.

Cases have been that crimes were revealed and the criminal brought to the bar of justice for punishment.

Even thirty years after the deed was committed justice grinds slowly often too slowly but the mills of the law grind surely and when the truth gets the seat and takes the tail on the tricks of crime, if there be crime the law of the criminal is almost invariably discovered and the criminal brought to bay. So far in ment of Jackson county took action. Officers left town suddenly. Deputy Sheriff Bob Jones went to Tuttle, Oklahoma Saturday morning he returned bringing the man Lee with him. Lee is now behind the bars of the county jail. Officers are leaving no stone unturned or effort un-done in their determination to discover if there was a murder committed. Whether that murder was Brantley or its victim and if so, was Lee the hand that sent the man to death. The public awaits in suspense for developments.

It is not possible for mortals to attain perfection but it is not only possible but necessary to approach it as nearly as may be if we wish to be happy.

this case all knowledge and evidence connected with it is of circumstantial nature, but so strong and convincing that the officers took steps on the premises and went to work with the determination to ferret out the crime and if Brantley was murdered to discover when how by whom and what disposition was made of the body.

Here's the case as it has developed to date. Brantley a bachelor came from Texas hired to Lee, and went to work on Lee's rented land. Brantley had over nine hundred dollars in cash. Lee was known to be a poor man and had no surplus money. Suddenly Brantley disappeared. Lee disappeared soon afterward. An old well on Lee's place was filled up. Six years elapse, the mystery became the topic of conversation on the streets of Altus. Let's dig up the well was the proposition. The well was dug up. The remains of a man's body found, and from all indications there had been a murder, foul, brutal and horrible. The sheriff's depart-

NORMAL FOR ADA.

There was a goodly crowd out at the Club rooms Saturday evening when the state normal was discussed.

When W. H. Ebey, chief clerk of the House of the Legislature, had concluded his remarks relative to his estimation of the situation at Guthrie, as affected Ada, there was a general applause and expressions of approval and mutual congratulation. Other citizens of Ada who had been at the State Capitol among whom were W. L. Reed and Chas. Thomas spoke briefly.

The following made additional subscriptions to the normal fund, making some instances the third subscription.

The Ada News got out a very creditable edition Monday evening, setting forth the virtues and growth of Ada, and her fitness for a state normal school. It was freely disseminated among the members of the legislature. Ada is certainly rustling for a state institution and it appears

will be successful.—Stratford Tribune

The Daily News appreciates the above compliment to itself and the encouraging words relative to Ada's excellent chance to secure the normal.

The Daily News is the medium through which to reach the people of Ada and surrounding country. It goes to them daily and you get quick results on your advertising.

AN EXPLANATION.

Some times one's enthusiasm in promotion or support of an enterprise prompts one to an action which may lack discretion.

It may be that some of the New's friends view the manner of the News discussion of the state normal campaign unfavorably. The public may know that the state normal committee has directed the general policy of this paper in its utterances relative to the state normal undertaking. But in specific endorsement of one or two fulminations vented by the News, it is probable that some of the normal committee do not concur, though they have forbore saying a word or winking an eye.

The News editor took occasion the other day to criticize the larger institutions in this city, having in mind the banks and cement manufacture for not having subscribed any amount to the normal fund in behalf of their own respective corporate concerns and furthermore desired to state that in probability the indifferent amount subscribed by many citizens was prompted through the thought that the heaviest institutions in the city were not responding to the committee's application for funds.

The News was unintentionally, but

clearly, in the wrong in uttering such criticism and makes explanation. It is clearly against the rules of both the State and National banking departments that banks shall be allowed to subscribe money to any enterprise wherein there is any speculation as to its success. Such discretion in the use of corporate funds is invariably the settled policy of all corporation officers and directors; therefore, the reason of the Ada banks and manufacture not appearing on the published subscription lists. And further, since it has been freely stated on the streets of Ada that the reason of so many small subscriptions from the rank and file of the business citizens was the thought that the presidents of the three leading Ada banks had only subscribed $5.00 each to the normal fund. It is justice to state, that also, in this thought there exists a misapprehension for it is now remembered by the News editor that when the State normal committee, three of whom were the bank presidents above referred to, agreed that since a representative must be sent to Guthrie at once, each of the committee, without taking a subscription at an inopportune time, would pay $5.00 each to meet the emergency. They did so with the one exemption of the News editor and turned the amount over to Mr. Ebey. The writer, in lieu of a $5.00 advance, and with the committee's permission paid his own expenses to Guthrie. Those members of the committee, including Messrs. Hays, Hope and Reed, bankers, did not mean at all to have that first five dollar subscription, paid on emergency, represent their regular subscriptions and in such showing each of them since has made additional liberal subscriptions.

Incidentally the president referred to the provision authorizing the printing of census reports by private concerns and laid stress on the point that where work was so allotted the eight hour law should be applied in effective fashion."

Grant's Old Home Rehabilitated.

St. Louis, Mo., Feb. 7.—The old home of Gen. U. S. Grant, on the Gravois road, St. Louis County, has been purchased by Augustus A. Busch, the millionaire brewer, and turned into a model game preserve.

The General's famous log cabin, which has been lifted bodily and taken to several expositions, has also been acquired and returned to its original foundation, and all of the souvenirs of the General's life that were obtainable have been placed in it. The cabin will be used as a museum.

Supreme Legal Authority.

Guthrie, Ok., Feb. 5.—A measure to make the Attorney General the supreme legal authority of the state was offered by Mr. Dunn of Oklahoma City in the house tonight, which provides that the Attorney General and his assistants and the county attorneys had their assistants. In the decision of the supreme court in the Haskell-West case affecting hearing of the Prairie Oil and Gas case in the Logan county district court, it was held that the laws did not define duties of the Attorney General and that he had no authority to initiate suits in the name of the state in the district court without consent of the governor, whom the constitution, the decision held, was the supreme authority in the state.

State Banking Board Report.

Guthrie, Ok., Feb. 5.—Gov. Haskell has submitted the first annual report of the state banking board to the legislature, showing that the guaranty fund amounts to $253,349.17, being 1 per cent on the average daily deposits for the year just closed. The assessment was gathered in four payments.

Only one failure is reported by the board, that of the International bank at Coalgate, on May 21, last year, it required $21,843.73 of the guaranty fund to handle the failure, all of which has been replaced in the fund.

The report makes no recommendations, however, the Radde bill, which passed the senate yesterday, has the approval of the state banking department.

AN EARTHQUAKE ALIBI FOR GOD.

Could God prove that He was not in Italy's recent earthquake? Or could somebody prove an alibi for Him? This question has been much discussed. Some will have it that God was not there at all. If He was not there, where was He? He is everywhere, and he was in the earthquake of course. And He was not there simply as a witness. He was there efficiently, or at least permissively. All the earthquakes that have ever been, or ever will be, have from all eternity, been taken into

God's great plan, and they are there with good reason, though we in our ignorance may not be able to dis-

sible to imagine any occurrence of any kind that was not in God's plan in some way, for some good purpose—the quake of an earthquake or the tremor of a leaf, the flight of a bird or of an airship. Laws of nature are but God's methods of working. Then what was God's purpose in allowing the earthquake and its slaughter of human beings? That is another question. If it were not for these awful catastrophes occasionally, it might be that we should get the big head and conclude that we are running the world, and doing it without any help from God. It might be that, without these awful manifestations of God's power, men would cease to believe that there is any God, and that as a consequence more would kill themselves in riotous living than are killed in the earthquake. Or it might be that the power of such calamities to draw the nations together in mutual sympathy and helpfulness will prevent wars and thus save many more lives than are lost in the earthquake. Or it might be that these sudden and awful seismic disturbances more effectively lift nations out of their selfishness and their indifference to higher things and thus minister to their training and development in such a way as to make this God's most economical way of accomplishing the discipline of humanity. Certainly these mighty convulsions of nature ought to startle all of us into the recognition of the uncertainty of life and the certainty of death, and ought to lead us to prepare for the inevitable end of this life, and the continuance of that which will never come to an end.—Central Baptist.

VALUE OF FRIENDSHIP.

We delight in friendship. We find comfort in it for times of sorrow, and increased joy in times of prosperity. Our friends exhort us and instruct us. They are like the good Books, furnishing lamps to our feet. They supply lights to our dwellings.

We do not value or use this friendship half so much as we should, even for ourselves. We moon away by ourselves and try to extract spiritual nutriment from the sucked-out orange of our minds, while close at hand is this rare, full-fruited orchard of our friends. An hour's talk with a group of friends—an hour's talk such as might easily be—is worth in mental quickening ten days in any library. But when we meet our friends we grunt and nod and silently pass them portions of our newspapers.

Friends may relieve our sorrows but we seldom speak of them. Friends may be buttresses against our temptations, but we do not disclose them. Friends may open to us new vistas in life and present to us new incentives to duty, but we stroll off on our solitary paths that finally return upon themselves. We choose our tasks and then bow down and worship them in loneliness, building up around them little temples of selfish application. What man is there—yourself or any of your acquaintances—that gets disillusioned out of friendship more than a very small part of what there is in it?

But all this is of little moment compared with the failure to utilize friendship for the good of the world. "I am fairly frantic," said Edison, looking out over the tumbling waves of the Atlantic, "when I see so much power going to waste." So must any philanthropist, any one that has at heart the good of mankind, feel moved with a vast longing to harness in beneficent service the countless currents and billows and moving tides of human affection.

Here are a dozen men that like one another immensely. I know more than one such coterie. Their tastes are closely akin. Their life tasks are similar. Their ideals are fashioned in the same great mould of Christianity. Their purposes are measurably consonant. They often come together for enjoyment and profit. Such a group of men furnishes all the elements of an almost irresistible social force. In the case of Napoleon and his generals, in the case of Socrates and his pupils, in the case of Carey and the Serampore Brotherhood, most of all in the case of Christ and the twelve apostles, we get glimpses of the mighty potency of such illustrations! They are the Pleiades and Hyades of history. They might be, they should be, the familiar forces of your city and your neighborhood.

Whenever any company of men or women or young folks are drawn to one another, let them ask themselves the meaning of that affinity. It is not given them for their own delight and use alone. They are to fashion their fellowship into a missionary force.

They are to consider what ideal, what noble impulse, is common to them all, or may be made common to them all. How runs the grain of the wood, that it may be split and smoothed into a tool? They are to watch for the movements of the spirit of God upon their souls, bending them toward some one direction. They are to yield themselves gladly to the leading of this or that of their number, as the Spirit seems to speak through him. They are to know that God has tasks that can be accomplished only by solitary workers. And they are willingly to obey His glorious will.

That is the secret of the whole matter—the eagerness to be used. When this eagerness exists in the hearts of men, unhampered by selfishness and egotism and pride, friendship becomes not merely a sparkling sea in which to bathe as the sunlight touches the crest of the waves and the sky laughs with the shouts of the rompers, but it becomes also a field for fleets, moving in stern ranks against all enemies of God, or setting forth upon discoveries of good.

Citizens of Ada who have friends or relatives visiting them, or when they go elsewhere on a visit, will confer a favor on the News by calling up No. 4 and phoning the information.

WHEREIN LIES REAL SNOBBERY.

American Writer Takes Distinct Issue with English Author.

"I know," said Mr. Anthony Hope Hawkins, recently, "it needs a good deal of courage to stand up in a cultivated audience and confess you have never read through—right through—'Paradise Lost.' But all good people ought to be brave enough to stand up and make such confession. Concealment in such a case the author of the 'Prisoner of Zenda' considers 'exasperating literary snobbishness.' This is a mistake which others than Anthony Hope have made and will go on making; that people, nowadays, are ashamed of confessing that they have never read 'Paradise Lost,' 'The Vicar of Wakefield' and 'Culture and Anarchy.' As a matter of fact, up-to-date literary snobbishness consists in boasting one's ignorance of Milton, Goldsmith and Matthew Arnold. In literary circles it is other gods that reign. It is Henry of whom one must have pagelins by heart, Swinburne that is quoted by romantic wood fires at studio teas, Wilde's 'Picture of Dorian Gray' that holds high place in fiction. It is the proper thing now to attach one's self to new and rather small writers. They alone know the 'modern' beat. To confess that one has read through 'Paradise Lost' would be almost as bad as saying one liked Dickens and Thackeray.—New York Evening Post.

AT WORK WITH BROKEN SPINE.

Man Who Defies All Accepted Laws of Medicine.

A man who, according to all the accepted laws of medicine, should have been dead six months ago, has been presented to the students of the Gottingen University hospital. In May last he fractured his spine in a fall and was taken to the hospital, where, although his case was considered hopeless, an operation was decided upon.

Accordingly the bones of the vertebral column were reunited with aluminum wire and the affected part straightened with a tube of the same metal. As, however, the slightest shock would have been fatal to the patient, he was placed in a specially constructed bath and kept lying in water for four months, at the end of which the injury had sufficiently healed to allow of his being removed to an ordinary bed.

A metal bandage was placed about his body, rendering movement impossible, but after another two months the patient, with the aid of a metal waistcoat, was able to walk. He is now able to do light work, and so long as he wears his "armor" and escapes another fall or similar hurt is expected to live.

Malvern Hill.

The hunting of the mansion which has for a century or two crowned the historic Malvern hill removes one of the famous objects of interest to passengers on the James river steamboats, since standing on an eminence of 60 feet out of the stream which thereabouts flows in long bows it could be seen for great distances and frequently reappeared in view after it had seemingly been passed. The convolutions of the river made this peculiar elevation the culminating point for the last of the seven days' battles of the peninsula between the Army of the Potomac under McClellan and the Army of Northern Virginia under Lee. Malvern hill thus capped proved to be the passing by one of the sights of our extremely delightful river trip. Like the other mansions of its period it faced the stream, that being its occupants' avenue of communication with the world.

Antelope in Colorado Fields.

About 200 antelope are feeding in alfalfa fields six miles southwest of here. These animals have been forced by the heavy snows to seek feed. Recently two bands, one numbering 125 and the other about 75, came in from the hills southwest of here. They have lived in this section since the law has been protecting them and at times have gone into settlements south of here. During the summer, and in fact at nearly all times of the year, they are quite tame. Some cattlemen have complained that they roamed over winter pastures and spoiled the range. At a ranch 30 miles south of here a large band is being fed with the ranchman's sheep.—Fort Morgan Correspondence, Denver Republican.

Envied the Waiter.

"It must be nice to be a waiter or have some other occupation like that that doesn't tie a fellow down to one place or one climate the year round," remarked a New York business man wistfully the other day, as he turned his overcoat collar and shivered. "The waiter who took my order at dinner last evening told me that he was going down to Palm Beach early in January, to work until warm weather again—said he didn't like the climate up here. He does that every year he says. I don't like our winter climate here either, but I haven't got the cinch he has. I have to stay here."

SOMETHING NEW TO PERSIANS.

Power of Electricity Astonished Subjects of the Shah.

While sojourning recently at Shiraz, Persia, on business connected with an overland telegraph, an Englishman was visited by a Persian noble who had received a paralytic stroke in his left shoulder and arm. He said he had been told that there were magicians in the west who cured all diseases "by the aid of this fire" (electricity). The Englishman, having moderated the Persian's expectations by remarking that the statement was an exaggeration, had a powerful battery prepared. To the two poles of the battery copper wire was attached, and at the extremity of each wire a damp sponge. The Persian was invited to grasp one in the hand of his paralyzed arm.

Timidly complying, he was astonished to feel no sensation. "Wait a moment," said the Englishman, and slapped the other sponge on the man's shoulder. With a leap and a yell he bounded out of the room, amid the uproarious laughter of the officials. The shock effected a partial cure, but the frightened man refused to submit to a second application, declaring that he would far sooner suffer the paralysis.

Another Persian, whose curiosity conquered his fear, while examining the battery touched one of the terminals of the machine. As he felt no sensation, he laid his hand on the other terminal. A sudden yell and a backward jump were the result. The man was afterward heard telling his companions that he had been bitten by the evil one.

RETAIN THE ANCIENT CUSTOM.

City of London Still Makes the Annual Gift of Cloth.

The corporation of the city has recently forwarded to certain officers of state and other functions gifts of cloth which are annually presented in accordance with a custom many centuries old, says the London Times.

Four yards and a half of the best black cloth have been sent to each of the following: The lord chancellor, the lord chief justice, the master of the rolls, the lord chamberlain, the vice-chamberlain, the lord steward, the treasurer and comptroller of his majesty's household, the home secretary, the secretary of state for foreign affairs, the attorney general, the solicitor general, the recorder, the chancellor and the common sergeant. The town clerk receives six yards of black cloth and six yards of green cloth, and his principal clerk four yards of each.

The origin of this custom is thus explained: In the early periods of history the retainers of great lords, wearing their liveries, were so numerous as to be dangerous both to the king and the laws. Many statutes were passed between 1377 and 1504 for the purpose of putting down disorders among the retainers, but an exception was made in favor of guilds and fraternities and men of "the mysteries" of cities and boroughs. This, it is thought, gave rise to the creation of liverymen of the several companies, and is supposed to be the foundation of this annual gift of what is called "livery cloth."

The Armstrong Goblet.

The Arm-ton branch of the Dundas family of England possesses a curious Venetian goblet, and, like the famous "lucky" of Eden Hall, they believe that their prosperity depends upon its preservation. It was given by his mother to Sir James Dundas in the reign of Queen Mary, with an injunction to preserve it carefully or misfortunes would attend the family. It once had a miraculous escape from destruction, for a very eccentric peeress, who for some unknown reason owed the family a grudge, concealing her sinister intentions, asked to be allowed to see it, and when it was handed to her she deliberately threw it on the ground.

Every one present held his breath, expecting to see it shattered into fragments, but strange to say it did not break, and it is still preserved intact.

The Higher the Better.

Mrs. Jean Cunen, the superb racing automobilist of New York, said the other day of a cheap car:

"It may be all right, but—you know how we all feel about cheapness, eh? My doctor recently told me how he once sought out a dealer and said:

"I want to buy a pair of good carriage horses—a good pair, you know—price not stiff."

"Well, of course sir," said the dealer, "to find horses—nothing easier. The woods is full of horses. But as far as price goes—well, you can have 'em at all prices, sir, just like doctors."

OKLAHOMA STATUTES NO GOOD

Editors of Laws Condensed Them,
State Loses $30,000.

Guthrie, Okla., Feb. 6.—That the statutes of 1908 are nothing but a digest of the laws of the state of Oklahoma and that they do not contain or attempt to contain a true and correct copy of the laws of the state is the finding of the Senate legal advisory committee as a result of an investigation into the numerous errors and omissions in the volume.

The only explanation of the existing condition which the committee is able to give is that the editors of the volume who were appointed by the supreme court thought that they had a right to condense the contents of the laws to save space and give what they considered a correct interpretation of the laws basing this view upon the wording of the statute passed by the last legislature which authorized the publication of the volume. The committee report does not express any concurrence with this view of the law as expressed by the editors but merely gives their version of the matter.

As a result of its findings the committee recommends that all references to existing laws in bills amending or repealing statutes be made to the statutes of 1890 or the subsequent session laws.

We should cease to refer to the opinions expressed in this book as to what the law is said Senator Thomas chairman of the committee in presenting its report but go back to the law itself.

This report of the legal advisory committee refers only to the utility of the new statutes for reference which is pronounced to be nil. A joint committee of the two houses is at present engaged in a general investigation of the statutes and has not yet made its report. It promises made concerning the many innovations of novel feature to be presented by a company of recognized talents all of whom understand the value of advanced ideas in the volume as well as infectious methods as well as infectious methods imprinted the book according to copy right.

FINDS HIS LOST SON.

They Had Been Separated Eighteen Years.—Lived in Same Block.

Muskogee Okla. Feb. 6.—Eighteen years ago Milo B. Ferry of Des Moines Iowa kissed his two little boys Milo and Clement five and three years old goodbye and sent them to relatives in Missouri to save them from a plague of typhoid fever which had devastated his home claiming six of his 12 children. The father himself was stricken with fever and when he recovered after weeks of illness it was only to find that all traces was lost of the little boys who had been sent away.

Today in Muskogee Mr. Terry an elderly man saw the name of Milo B. Ferry signed to a petition and going to the residence of the Ferry found that the young man is his son for whom he has been searching for 18 years. For the past seven months father and son have lived within a block of each other in the Midland Valley addition here. The elder Ferry is in the grocery business in Muskogee. The younger is an employee of the Midland Valley Coal. After father and son had reconnected over the strange meetings arrangements were made for the elder Ferry to take up his residence with his sons family.

KILLS SEDUCER OF DAUGHTER

MAN SUDDENLY DISAPPEARS

Remains of Someone Found in Filled Old Well.—A Suspect Arrested.

El Reno Okla., Feb. 6.—Walter Hubbard a prominent young man of this city was shot and killed this afternoon by Charles Steenrod, a mail carrier and the father of a girl Hubbard is said to have wronged. The first two shots fired by the father of the girl went wild. Hubbard in Steenrod pursuing and firing. One bullet struck the young man in the neck and another lodged in his back. Hubbard fell. As he lay on the ground another shot was fired taking effect in his heart. Steenrod then surrendered himself to the police. The shooting began at a school house in the south part of the city where Hubbard was working as a contractor.

It is said that Steenrod had talked with Hubbard regarding the alleged assault yesterday afternoon and returned home from the Hubbard residence swearing vengeance. He is said to have bloodied over the affair all night. This afternoon he took his revolver and left the house. The shooting followed. A coroner's jury returned a verdict tonight holding that Hubbard met his death by being shot by Steenrod.

NO PARTNERSHIP CONTENDED.

Standard Oil and Missouri to Have Working Agreement.

Jefferson City Mo. Feb. 7.—Attorney General Major in a statement tonight relative to the motion for a modification of the judgement of ouster filed by the Standard Oil Company said he does not deem it necessary to file any additional replies with the Supreme Court to the suggestions of the Standard Oil attorneys. The motion of the oil attorneys he said simply asks for clemency in the modification of the decree. The statement in part follows:

The proposed modification is not an offer to do business in partnership with the State but that the judgement of ouster be modified and the matter held in abeyance and in the meantime permit the company to do business under the eye of the court of the State. If the court desired it could under the modification proceed to render a judgement of final ouster.

Under the modification as proposed the State could control the price of the products and prevent the company from recouping its losses in fines from the people. In the last analysis it presents a question of whether or not the welfare of the State its business and its citizens would be benefited to any extent by warranting a Court of Chancery to undertake the supervision. The interests of the Standard Oil Company itself is not a matter of consideration. It is a procedure unique and new because the conditions presented are unique and new. Should the modification be favorably considered then I would in that event ask that the fine be greatly increased.

It is a question purely in the discretion of the Court.

SUBMISSION LOST IN TEXAS.

Only One More Vote Needed to Have Won.

Austin Feb. 6.—One vote defeated submission in the house. Immediately upon convening the members plunged into the submission issue. The call of the house to order to secure a full attendance of all members in Austin and it was found that but three members were absent. Goodman who is an anti-submissionist. Pierce a republican and Waller who is regarded as against the resolution.

Vote announced was 86 to 45 in favor of submission. Loss was declared as less than two thirds, necessary to carry.

The actual vote was 86 to 44 but Mobley a strong submissional changed his vote at the last moment so he can call the question for reconsideration.

The vote of 86 constituted almost the needed majority and the submissionalists would have needed but 87 or just one more vote.

1 Bunch of Keys.

Hoyt's justly famous and by all odds the musical farce comedy with the longest and most brilliant record will bring to the Ada Opera House next Tuesday night February 9th not only a big lot of progressive fun and delightful music but promises a batch of novel and interesting features the like of which it is said will perfectly astound even those who have always expected surprises from its source. Aside from the additional fun and music interpolations A Bunch of Keys has prepared for this season's program an interpolation of artists of pronounced ability all of whom have been identified with the highest and best entertainments ever announced.

NORMAL FOR ADA.

There was a goodly crowd out at the Club rooms Saturday evening when the state normal was discussed.

When W. H. Ebley, chief clerk of the House of the Legislature, had concluded his remarks relative to his estimation of the situation at Guthrie, as affected Ada, there was a general applause, and expressions of approval and mutual congratulation.

Other citizens of Ada who had been at the State Capitol among whom were: W. L. Reed and Chas. Thomas spoke briefly.

The following made additional subscriptions to the normal fund, making some instances the third subscription.

The Ada News got out a very creditable edition Monday evening, setting forth the virtues and growth of Ada, and her fitness for a state normal school. It was freely distributed among the members of the legislature. Ada is certainly rustling for a state institution and it appears

will be successful.—Stratford Tribune

The Daily News appreciates the above compliment to itself and the encouraging words relative to Ada's excellent chance to secure the normal.

The Daily News is the medium through which to reach the people of Ada and surrounding country. It goes to them daily and you get quick results on your advertising.

AN EXPLANATION.

Some times one's enthusiasm in promotion or support of an enterprise prompts one to an action which may lack discretion.

It may be that some of the News' friends view the manner of the News' discussion of the state normal campaign unfavorably. The public may know that the state normal committee has directed the general policy of this paper in its utterances relative to the state normal budget-taking. But in specific endorsement of one or two fulminations vented by the News, it is probable that some of the normal committee do not concur, though they have borne saying a word or winking an eye.

The News editor took occasion the other day to criticize the larger institutions in this city, having in mind the banks and cement manufacture, for not having subscribed any amount to the normal fund in behalf of their own respective corporate concerns, and furthermore dared to state that in probability the indifferent amounts subscribed by many citizens was prompted through the thought that the heaviest institutions in the city were not responding to the committee's application for funds.

The News was unintentionally, but

clearly, in the wrong in uttering such criticism and makes explanation. It is clearly against the rules of both the State and National banking departments that banks shall be allowed to subscribe money to any enterprise wherein there is any speculation as to its success. Such discretion in the use of corporate funds is invariably the settled policy of all corporation officers and directors; therefore, the reason of the Ada banks and manufacture not appearing on the published subscription lists. And further, since it has been freely stated on the streets of Ada that the reason of so many small subscriptions from the rank and file of the business citizens was the thought that the presidents of the three leading Ada banks had only subscribed $5.00 each to the normal fund, it is justice to state, that also, in this thought there exists a misapprehension for it is now remembered by the News editor that when the State normal committee, three of whom were the bank presidents above referred to, agreed that since a representative must be sent to Guthrie at once, each of the committee, without taking a subscription at an inopportune time, would pay $5.00 each to meet the emergency. They did so with the one exception of the News editor and turned the amount over to Mr. Ebley. The writer, in lieu of a $5.00 advance, and with the committee's permission paid his own expenses to Guthrie. Those members of the committee, including Messrs. Hays, Hope and Reed, bankers, did not mean at all to have that first five dollar subscription paid on emergency represent their regular subscriptions and in such showing each of them since has made additional liberal subscriptions.

In these words President Roosevelt today summoned up a message to the house of representatives, returning without his approval the bill providing for the taking of the next census, because of the provisions prescribing that appointments shall be made on the basis of non-competitive examinations instead of through the civil service commission. As passed by congress the bill permitted members to designate persons for positions after they had undergone a simple examination.

Incidentally the president referred to the provision authorizing the printing of census reports by private concerns and laid stress on the point that where work was so allotted the eight hour law should be applied in effective fashion.

Grant's Old Home Rehabilitated. St. Louis, Mo., Feb. 7.—The old home of Gen. U. S. Grant, on the Gravois road, St. Louis County, has been purchased by Augustus A. Busch, the millionaire brewer, and turned into a model game preserve.

The General's famous log cabin, which has been lifted bodily and taken to several expositions, has also been acquired and returned to its original foundation, and all of the souvenirs of the General's life that were obtainable have been placed in it. The cabin will be used as a museum.

Supreme Legal Authority.

Guthrie, Ok., Feb. 5.—A measure to make the Attorney General the supreme legal authority of the state was offered by Mr. Dunn of Oklahoma City in the house tonight, which provides that the Attorney General and his assistants and the county attorneys had their assistants. In the decision of the supreme court in the Haskell-West case affecting hearing of the Prairie Oil and Gas case in the Logan county district court it was held that the laws did not define the duties of the Attorney General and that he had no authority to initiate suits in the name of the state in the district court without consent of the governor, whom the constitution, the Jeff, but they just won't listen to your advice.—Grady County Express.

It seems probable that the incoming administration will inherit the Dr. Crum case. This colored man's name has been sent to the Senate repeatedly by President Roosevelt, as collector of the port of Charlestown, to be turned down each time.—Denison Herald.

A great many of our firms are sending to Washington for their envelopes. Uncle Sam furnishes envelopes for nothing and stamps and prints same for just about the cost of stamps. Of course we cannot expect to enter into competition with the U. S. but believe that if the business men will give the matter a minute's thought they will patronize home institutions instead.—Madill News.

AN EARTHQUAKE ALIBI FOR GOD.
Could God prove that He was not in Italy's recent earthquake? Or could somebody prove an alibi for Him? This question has been much discussed. Some will have it that God was not there at all. If He was not there, where was He? He is everywhere, and he was in the earthquake of course. And He was not there simply as a witness. He was there efficiently, or at least persistently. All the earthquakes that have ever been, or ever will be, from all eternity, been taken into God's great plan, and they are there with good reason, though we in our ignorance may not be able to discover these reasons. It is impossible to imagine any occurrence of any kind that was not in God's plan in some way, for some good purpose—the quake of an earthquake or the tremor of a leaf, the flight of a bird or of an airship. Laws of nature are but God's methods of working. Then what was God's purpose in allowing the earthquake and its slaughter of human beings? That is another question. If it were not for these awful catastrophes occasionally, it might be that we should get the big head and conclude that we are running the world, and doing it without any help from God. It might be that, without these mighty convulsions of nature, ought to startle all of us into the recognition of the uncertainty of life and the certainty of death, and ought to lead us to prepare for the inevitable end of this life, and the continuance of that which will never come to an end.—Central Baptist.

We delight in friendship. We find comfort in it for times of sorrow, and increased joy in times of prosperity. Our friends exhort us and instruct us. They are like the good Books, furnishing lamps to our feet. They supply lights to our dwellings.

We do not value or use this friendship half so much as we should, even for ourselves. We moon away by ourselves and try to extract spiritual nutriment from the sucking-out orange of our minds, while close at hand is this rare, full-fruited orchard of our friends. An hour's talk with a group of friends—an hour's talk such as might easily be—is worth in mental quickening ten days in any library. But when we meet our friends we grant and nod and silently pass them portions of our newspapers.

Friends may halve our sorrows but we seldom speak of them. Friends may be buttresses against our temptations, but we do not disclose them. Friends may open to us new vistas in life and present to us new incentives to duty, but we strol off on our solitary paths that finally return upon themselves. We choose our tasks and then bow down and worship them in loneliness, building up around them little temples of selfish application. What man is there—yourself or any of your acquaintances—that gets for himself out of friendship more than a very small part of what there is in it?

But all this is of little moment compared with the failure to utilize friendship for the good of the world. "I am fairly frantic," said Edison, looking out over the tumbling waves of the Atlantic, "when I see so much power going to waste." So must any philanthropist, any one that has at heart the good of mankind, feel moved with a vast longing to harness in beneficent service the countless currents and billows and moving tides of human affection.

Here are a dozen men that like one another immensely. I know more than one such coteries. Their tastes are closely akin. Their life tasks are similar. Their ideals are fashioned in the same great mould of Christianity. Their purposes are measurably consonant. They often come together for enjoyment and profit. Such a group of men furnishes all the elements of an almost irresistible social force. In the case of Napoleon and his generals, in the case of Socrates and his pupils, in the case of Carey and the Serampore Brotherhood, most of all in the case of Christ and the twelve apostles, we get glimpses of the mighty potency of such illustrations! They are the Piedades and Hyades of history. They might be, they should be, the familiar forces of your city and your neighbourhood.

Whenever any company of men or women or young folks are drawn to one another, let them ask themselves the meaning of that affinity. It is not given them for their own delight and use alone. They are to fashion their fellowship into a missionary force.

They are to consider what ideal, what noble impulse, is common to them all, or may be made common to them all. How runs the grain of the wood, that it may be split and smoothed into a tool? They are to watch for the movements of the spirit of God upon their souls, bending them toward some one direction. They are to yield themselves gladly to the leading of this or that of their number, as the Spirit seems to speak through him. They are to know that God has tasks that can be accomplished only by solitary workers. And they are willingly to obey His glorious will.

That is the secret of the whole matter—the eagerness to be used. When this eagerness exists in the hearts of men, unhampered by selfishness and egotism and pride, friendship becomes not merely a sparkling sea in which to bathe as the sunlight torches the crest of the waves and the sky laughs with the shouts of the rompers, but it becomes also a field for fleets, moving in stern ranks against all enemies of God, or setting forth upon discoveries of good.

WHEREIN LIES REAL SNOBBERY.

American Writer Takes Distinct Issue with English Author.

"I know," said Mr. Anthony Hope Hawkins, recently, "it needs a good deal of courage to stand up in a cultivated audience and confess you have never read through—right through—'Paradise Lost.'" But all good people ought to be brave enough to stand up and make such confession. Concealment in such a case the author of the "Prisoner of Zenda" considers "exasperating literary snobishness." This is a mistake which others than Anthony Hope have made and will go on making: that people, nowadays, are ashamed of confessing that they have never read "Paradise Lost," "The Vicar of Wakefield" and "Culture and Anarchy." As a matter of fact, up-to-date literary snobishness consists in boasting one's ignorance of Milton, Goldsmith and Matthew Arnold. In literary circles it is other gods that reign. It is Henley of whom one must have pagefuls by heart, Swinburne that is quoted by romantic wood fires at studio teas. Wilde's "Picture of Dorian Grey" that holds high place in fiction. It is the proper thing now to attach one's self to new and rather small writers. They alone know the "modern" heart. To confess that one has read through "Paradise Lost" would be almost as bad as saying one liked Dickens and Thackeray.—New York Evening Post.

AT WORK WITH BROKEN SPINE.

Man Who Defies All Accepted Laws of Medicine.

A man who, according to all the accepted laws of medicine, should have been dead six months ago, has been presented to the students of the Gottingen University hospital. In May last he fractured his spine in a fall and was taken to the hospital, where, although his case was considered hopeless, an operation was decided upon.

Accordingly the bones of the vertebral column were reunited with aluminum wire and the affected part straightened with a tube of the same metal. As, however, the slightest shock would have been fatal to the patient, he was placed in a specially constructed bath and kept lying in water for four months, at the end of which the injury had sufficiently healed to allow of his being removed to an ordinary bed.

A metal bandage was placed about his body, rendering movement impossible, but after another two months the patient, with the aid of a metal waistcoat, was able to walk. He is now able to do light work, and so long as he wears his "armor" and escapes another fall or similar hurt is expected to live.

Malvern Hill.

The burning of the mansion which has for a century or two crowned the historic Malvern hill removes one of the famous objects of interest to passengers on the James river steamboats, since standing on an eminence of 80 feet out of the stream which thereabouts flows in long bows it could be seen for great distances and frequently reappeared in view after it had seemingly been passed. The convolutions of the river made this peculiar elevation the culminating point for the last of the seven days' battles of the peninsula between the Army of the Potomac under McClellan and the Army of Northern Virginia under Lee. Malvern hill thus capped proved to be the passes of one of the sights of our extremely delightful river trip. Like the other mansions of its period it faced the stream, that being its occupants' avenue of communication with the world.

Antelope in Colorado Fields.

About 200 antelope are feeding in alfalfa fields six miles southwest of here. These animals have been forced by the heavy snows to seek feed. Recently two bands, one numbering 125 and the other about 75, came in from the hills southwest of here. They have lived in this section since the law has been protecting them and at times have gone into settlements south of here. During the summer, and in fact at nearly all times of the year, they are quite tame. Some cattlemen have complained that they roamed over winter pastures and spoiled the range. At a ranch 30 miles south of here a large band is being fed with the ranchman's sheep.—Fort Morgan Correspondence, Denver Republican.

Envy the Walter.

"It must be nice to be a walter or have some other occupation like that that doesn't tie a fellow down to one place or one climate the year round," remarked a New York business man wistfully the other day, as he turned up the other day, as he turned up his overcoat collar and shivered. "The walter who took my order at dinner last evening told me that he was going down to Palm Beach early in January, to work until warm weather again—said he didn't like the climate up here. He does that every year he says. I don't like our winter climate here either, but I haven't got the cinch he has. I have to stay here."

SOMETHING NEW TO PERSIANS.

Power of Electricity Astonished Subjects of the Shah.

While sojourning recently at Shiraz, Persia, on business connected with an overland telegraph, an Englishman was visited by a Persian noble who had received a paralytic stroke in his left shoulder and arm. He said he had been told that there were magicians in the west who cured all diseases "by the aid of this fire" (electricity). The Englishman, having moderated the Persian's expectations by remarking that the statement was an exaggeration, had a powerful battery prepared. To the two poles of the battery copper wire was attached, and at the extremity of each wire a damp sponge. The Persian was invited to grasp one in the hand of his paralyzed arm.

Timidly complying, he was astonished to feel no sensation. "Wait a moment," said the Englishman, and clapped the other sponge on the man's shoulder. With a leap and a yell he bounded out of the room, amid the uproarious laughter of the officials. The shock effected a partial cure, but the frightened man refused to submit to a second application, declaring that he would far sooner suffer the paralysis.

Another Persian, whose curiosity conquered his fear, while examining the battery touched one of the terminals of the machine. As he felt no sensation, he laid his hand on the other terminal. A sudden yell and a backward jump were the result. The man was afterward heard telling his companions that he had been bitten by the evil one.

RETAIN THE ANCIENT CUSTOM.

City of London Still Makes the Annual Gift of Cloth.

The corporation of the city has recently forwarded to certain officers of state and other functions gifts of cloth which are annually presented in accordance with a custom many centuries old, says the London Times.

Four yards and a half of the best black cloth have been sent to each of the following: The lord chancellor, the lord chief justice, the master of the rolls, the lord chamberlain, the vice-chamberlain, the lord steward, the treasurer and comptroller of his majesty's household, the home secretary, the secretary of state for foreign affairs, the attorney general, the solicitor general, the recorder, the chamberlain and the common sergeant. The town clerk receives six yards of black cloth and six yards of green cloth, and his principal clerk four yards of each.

The origin of this custom is thus explained: In the early periods of history the retainers of great lords, wearing their liveries, were so numerous as to be dangerous both to the king and the laws. Many statutes were passed between 1377 and 1504 for the purpose of putting down disorders among the retainers, but an exception was made in favor of guilds and fraternities and men of "the mysteries" of cities and boroughs. This, it is thought, gave rise to the creation of liverymen of the several companies, and is supposed to be the foundation of this annual gift of what is called "livery cloth."

The Armiton Goblet.

The Armiton branch of the Dundas family of England possesses a curious Venetian goblet and, like the famous "Inch" of Eden Hall, they believe that their prosperity depends upon its preservation. It was given by his mother to Sir James Dundas in the reign of Queen Mary, with an injunction to preserve it carefully or misfortunes would attend the family. It once had a miraculous escape from destruction, for a very eccentric peeress, who for some unknown reason owed the family a grudge, concealing her sinister intentions, asked to be allowed to see it, and when it was handed to her she deliberately threw it on the ground. Every one present held his breath, expecting to see it shattered into fragments, but strange to say it did not break, and it is still preserved intact.

The Higher the Better.

Mrs. Jean Cuneo, the superb racing automobilist of New York, said the other day of a cheap car:

"It may be all right, but—you know how we all feel about cheapness, eh?"

"My doctor recently told me how he once sought out a dealer and said:

"I want to buy a pair of good carriage horses—a good pair, you know—price not stiff."

"Well, of course sir," said the dealer, "to find horses—nothing easier. The woods is full of horses. But as far as price goes—well, you can have 'em at all prices, sir, just like doctors!"

Rivals.

Eleanor, aged four, was given pennies for Sunday school. Upon her return from Sunday school mamma discovered she still held her pennies.

"Why did you not give your pennies to the teacher?" she was asked.

"Teacher said the money was for Jesus, and I thought I'd keep mine for gum."—Delinior.

Memory is given to us for purpose of help and encouragement only. When we allow our memories to discourage us, we are sinning against God and our fellow-men. It is as wrong to brood over memories of our mistakes and failures as it would be to drink typhoid fever germs with deliberate intention. We can learn, from the memory of our failures how to guard against repeating those failures, but that is the only right we have to such memories. Much of our past we have no business to remember at all; and God will help us to blot it out if we confidently ask His aid in this. "The man who cannot forget the past is, no good for the future."
